Thanks to your support, Amanda faces her future with hope...

Amanda during treatment

Amanda and her family

When genetic testing revealed Amanda had a faulty MLH1 gene—Lynch Syndrome—the new mum was relieved to at least know why she'd developed bowel cancer at such a young age.

"My mother was diagnosed at 40, my aunt was diagnosed at 35, and then I was diagnosed at 32," Amanda said.

After suffering intense abdominal pain throughout her second pregnancy, Amanda's family history played heavily on her mind.

"I knew something was wrong—I'd never experienced pain like that in my first pregnancy. But after April was born the pain became almost unbearable," she said.

An ultrasound confirmed her worst fears. With a 6-centimetre tumour almost completely blocking her bowel, Amanda was referred to Mater, where she discovered her cancer had spread to her lymph nodes.

Her first daughter Lilly wasn't quite two, and her new baby April was just 12 weeks old.

"I looked at this little baby in my arms... and the next minute I was being wheeled in for urgent surgery to remove half my bowel. I also had to have liver surgery, and then it was straight into chemotherapy," Amanda said.

agonising decision between having the third baby they'd always dreamed of or taking the safe road with a full hysterectomy as soon as possible.

The genetic testing revealed that Amanda wasn't just predisposed to bowel cancer—her chances of developing bladder, stomach, uterine and ovarian cancer down the track are considerably higher.

"It would also put me into early menopause which carries other significant health ramifications, particularly around my heart, as well as an increased osteoporosis risk."

"The research in this space is remarkable and keeps improving. I think I'm lucky to know at least what I'm predisposed to, and that's because of research. Knowledge is power, and I can now do everything in my power to be around to see my babies grow up."

When you purchase your Mater Cars for Cancer ticket, you are joining the global effort to change the future of cancer diagnoses, treatment and care, while supporting those in your community receiving treatment at Mater, just like Amanda. We can't thank you enough for your support.
